Students Pack Gifts for Children Across the World

Dec. 6, 2013

A group of students from the College of Health and Human Development have filled more than 30 shoe boxes full of gifts, including toys, school supplies, toiletries and books that are being delivered to needy children as part of Operation Christmas Child. Kinesiology major Alyssa Jensen, co-director of event planning for the college’s Inter-Club Council, said the students packed the shoe boxes as part of a service project, in an effort to brighten the holidays for some of the poorest children of the world. “We were looking for a community service project that would benefit kids in places where receiving any kind of gift at all is mind-blowing,” Jensen said. “This will make Christmas special for them.”
