Jewelmani Bell
College of Health and Human Development | STUDENT SPOTLIGHT

What are some challenges you have faced? How did you overcome them?

Living on my own was a bit of a shock. I had to become responsible for myself and make choices that would support my academic journey. I’ve become more organized in the process and have learned how to better manage my time by using calendars, whiteboards and whatever makes it easier for me to remember my assignments.

How has HHD prepared you for your future?

Without HHD, I would not have found out about epidemiology. HHD has shown me the various career options for my major and it’s very comforting to know that I made the right decision when choosing my major.

What are some benefits you have had through being involved?

Being involved on campus has allowed me to fall in love with CSUF. It’s helped me break out of my shell and become more comfortable with meeting new people.

Jewelmani Bell is in her third year as a Health Science major and is expecting to graduate this May. She would like to be an epidemiologist and work for the Centers of Disease Control and Prevention. She is currently involved in HHD-ICC as a member at large and Eta Sigma Gamma. Previously she was a peer mentor and resided on the HHD-theme floor in housing. All of these clubs and activities have allowed her to develop leadership skills, network with peers in related fields, and establish lasting relationships with advisors and other faculty members.

How has CSUF prepared you for your future?

The career center and CICE have really helped me when it came to gaining experience in my field and also writing resumes.
