Kevin Kelly

College of Health and Human Development | STUDENT SPOTLIGHT

How has the College of Health and Human Development prepared you for your future?

The College of Health and Human Development has helped me by providing the Student Success Centers where I can study and get help with classes I am having difficulty.

What are some challenges you have faced and how did you overcome them?

Trying to be organized and stay organized is a challenge for me. I stay organized by putting everything in a calendar on my phone. My Iphone has saved me many times!

What are some tips you have for students at CSUF?

Get involved! There is a club or center for everyone on our campus. People are here to help, you just have to ask for it. I also suggest meeting with your advisors. I always meet with my advisors before and after each semester.

Kevin Kelly is a senior Human Services major on the Mental Health track. He plans to become a therapist or counselor specializing in marital issues. Kevin is involved with Substance Abuse And Prevention Student Association, the WoMen’s and Adult Reentry Center, and Peer Health University Network (PHUN). These involvements give him leadership responsibilities and positions. He is the current president of SAAPSA and held the position of fundraising coordinator in the past. Kevin is also a peer educator for sexual assault, domestic violence, and stalking in the WoMen’s and Adult Reentry Center. With these roles he has learned how to handle difficult situations such as substance abuse and sexual assault.

What are some benefits you have had through being involved?

I have made a lot of new friends. I am also able to network with faculty and peers within my involvements. I am given the opportunity to grow and learn through trainings provided by my involvements.

“IT is our light not our darkness that frightens us.”
